

Remote Work Debate Intensifies as CT Continues Economic Reopening, Infection Rates Spike

Related People:

Pamela J. Moore

Hartford Business Journal

10.19.2020

Productivity at Hartford's Covr Financial Technologies soared this spring when it abruptly shifted to remote work in the throes of the coronavirus outbreak in March.

Pam Moore, a partner at Hartford law firm McCarter & English, said most companies have a strong desire to reopen to maintain high productivity and also bring back a sense of teamwork that can't easily be replicated when workers are fully remote.

Most office-based companies are going to limited capacity and using staggered schedules and other methods to keep employees safe, she said.