As the global pandemic moves into its second year, it has ushered in a host of insurance law issues, some old and some new. The American College of Coverage Counsel, a leading organization of lawyers representing leading policyholder and insurer-side advocates, has joined forces with the University of Pennsylvania Law School to provide an insightful overview of the evolving dynamics of these claims and resultant coverage litigation.

In this webinar, insurance law experts examine the specific impact of the pandemic on sports teams, hotel chains, casinos and other insureds in the sports and entertainment business, along with a discussion of the unique policy wordings that are at issue in the dozens of coverage suits that have recently been filed seeking coverage for pandemic-related losses. This program also addresses the specific problem of event cancellation coverage due to COVID-19 related restrictions on gatherings.
