High profile union organizing campaigns at Amazon, Starbucks, and other employers have raised the issue of worker organization to a new high. With private sector unionization at an all-time low, most employers (and employees) have no experience with the rules surrounding such activity, and often don't even know the right questions to ask to evaluate their goals, develop strategies, and stay on the right side of the law. Hugh Murray led this 30 minute program which succinctly and clearly explained the legal framework around employee collective action, including unionization.
